INTRODUCTION

As we live in the 21st century, international relationship is of great significance. It is so because it includes a great variety of transitional relationships. (Palmer and Perkins, 2011). It is an agreed fact the relations of states are comprehensible against a context, as the relations of individuals are comprehensible against a context: (Bajpai and Shukul 1995). We should also keep in mind that there exists a context which gives meaning to and channels the behaviour of states in their relations with other states and other external entities. (Bajpai and Shukul 1995). It should be taken into deep consideration that this context is by no means inscribed forever, nor is there full agreement with all its elements and characteristics. (Bajpai and Shukul 1995). Therefore, it is well nigh impossible to deny the importance of international relationship in today's world or world politics at large. It has become the main focus of the world today.

International relations have assumed all the more great significance. In the twenty first century, we live in a world that is both fascinating and terrifying - one that exhibits deep contradictions and yet manifest high hopes. (Duncan et al. - 2002). Further, the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Centre and the Pentagon, demonstrated just how complex international relations have become in the past decade. (Wenger, & Zimmermann, 2004). It should be stated that the relationship of nations emits a great mark of implications not only in the relationship status of two or more countries but also exerts a tremendous influence all over the region and the world. Therefore, international relationship is significant from all dimensions. (Chakrabarty, 2014). This definitely shapes the pattern and dimension of international relations at large which can exert a tremendous influence in the course of action of the states concerned and world politics too. In fact, it is the crux of the day.

We cannot deny that it is very significant from all respects. The relationship between two countries is always significant and important not only from the regional politics but also from the point of view of world politics too. It is very natural to state that if the relationship of the countries, particularly, the neighbouring countries, is friendly, the atmosphere of the region remains filled with good oxygen which produces peace but if it is reverse, the entire environment becomes smoky and poisonous. (Chakrabarty, 2014). Therefore, from all practical aspects, it is really hard to ignore that it greatly affects the international scenario. It has rightly been said that the foreign policy of a nation becomes all the more important because it determines the nature of relationship either between two countries or a large number of countries. As per international norms, foreign policies are the central objective to preserve the liberty of states and to maintain the balance of power. Again, a special care should be taken for understanding international relationship because there has been a paradigm shift in its content. In fact, the disciplinary dimensions of international politics have witnessed quantitative expansion as well as qualitative complexities since 1945. (Jaitly, 1986). It is also significant to note that a cursory look at the expanded scope of international relations and
